

The durable room under the skies: every service and its fly, the person, and the app — one quiet screen, reached by a pull, left with a Done, it is plumbing, so it holds the calm harder than anywhere else: no tabs, no tree, no toggles farm. The centerpiece is the reconnect moment — a dead login is not an alarm, and the fix is the door the person already walked through once.

a card dims on your sky → tap it — the same door, in place → or pull down — the room below → sign in · paste · point → every card relights

One room, two shelves

Connections, then Account, on a single scroll — 1b. Every flow is a sheet on top of it; depth never exceeds one. There is no settings tree to get lost in.

Trouble sorts up, health goes silent

A broken service rises to the top of the list wearing the only dot on the page; healthy rows just say when they last breathed. No green anything.

The same door, re-run

Reconnect is the connect flow again — out-and-back for a sign-in, a paste for a key, a place for a location (Id). Nothing new to learn on the day something breaks.

Three removes, three weights

A card leaves with an undo, a service asks once and goes ghost, the account asks and then makes you hold — 1e, 1f. Friction equals consequence.

1a The entry — how you get below deck three candidates, ordered by how much chrome they add: none, none, one row · the glance stays untouched

TAKE A — PULL DOWN · THE ROOM HANGS ABOVE EVERY SKY

Mid-pull. Skies swipe sideways; a sky is one screenful by design, so the vertical axis is free. Pull down and the room follows your finger; let go past a third and it settles. Done — or push it back up — returns you exactly where you were. Nothing is added to the idle glance.

TAKE B — THE WORDMARK IS THE DOOR

A touch wakes the dial; the wordmark was already there, top-left, and tapping it opens the room. Zero added chrome — but settling says it is a door, and the mark deserves to stay an identity, not a button. Passed.

TAKE C — THE LAST ROW OF TEND

At page altitude in Tend — where editing already lives — one quiet row under the skies. Findable by eye, two taps deep, never on the glance. Not fast, but honest about where it belongs.

Committed: A and C together — a gesture for the hand that knows, a row for the eye that is looking; a gesture without a findable twin is a secret. B stays identity, not a button. The third door is the broken card itself (1d). Flagged, not silently decided: whether the pull handle should wear the one dot when a service is broken but none of its cards are on the current sky — honest, cheap, slightly loud. Default, no dot, the home sorts trouble to the top the moment you arrive.

1b The home — one room, two shelves Connections and Account are sections of one scroll, not screens · the Tweaks panel flips the account shelf to Pro

THE ROOM, SORTED BY NEED

One screen, no tabs. Trouble rises to the top wearing the only dots on the page; healthy rows just state their last update. Ghosts sit dim with their price for a trailing word — the same language, they speak on a sky. Delete waits at the bottom in plain type; its weight arrives only when tapped (1f).

THE ROOM AT REST

Most days the room is this boring, and that is the promise: nothing pulses, nothing counts up, nothing asks. Connected rows state how they connect — a sign-in, a key ending, a place — so updating a credential starts from what you can already see.

1c The broken card and the fix — the hardest seam, two takes discovery happens on the sky; where does the tap land?

DISCOVERY — A CARD DIMS ON YOUR SKY

The card drops to its error state: value dimmed to a shadow, last-known kept, one dot in the caption row. The sky stays calm — no banner, no red fill, no bounce. A dead login is not an alarm.

TAKE A — THE DOOR OPENS WHERE YOU NOTICED

The tap opens the reconnect sheet right on the sky — the same shape of door that first connected Linear in The Sky Fills In. You never leave the place where you noticed.

TAKE B — THE CARD POINTS BELOW DECK

The tap lands below deck, scrolled to the Linear row, the row raised one surface step. One place ever fixes things, and you see the rest of the room's health while you are here — but it is a detour when all you want is the light back. Passed.

Committed: Take A. Connecting has always happened where the card is — repair keeps that promise. The home lists the exact same door on its rows, so there is one door shape with two handles: the card you noticed, and the row you went looking for. Nothing is learned twice.

1d Reconnect — the same three doors out-and-back for a sign-in · a paste for a key · a place for a location

SIGN-IN SERVICES — OUT: THEIR SCREEN, NOT OURS

Linear and Google Calendar re-run their original handoff — out to their screen, back to ours. We never collect a password; the moment is designed around that, not away from it.

BACK — THE SKY YOU LEFT, RELIGHTING

The handoff returns to where you pulled the handle — the sky, not the home. Every Linear card on every sky relights at once; the row below deck settles to silence without a visit. Connecting one card has always fit them all; repairing works the same.

THE KEY SERVICE — PASTE A NEW ONE

The first-connect sheet with one new opening line. Checking happens on the bottom; a bad key recolors the input border and says so in one line — the pattern from The Sky Fills In, unchanged. The same sheet, opened from a healthy row, is how you swap the key on purpose.

THE LOCATION SERVICE — POINT IT SOMEWHERE

Repair, update, and first connect are one sheet: change your city here on a good day, fix a denied permission here on a bad one. Naming a city recovers the error without ever touching system settings; "Allow location" hands off to the OS prompt and comes straight back.

HOW A ROW WEARS TROUBLE

Only expired asks anything of a person. None of the three raise their voice, and healthy — the fourth state — wears nothing at all.

1e Disconnect — the middle weight a service's own sheet · the thing asks in place · its cards everywhere go ghost

A ROW'S SHEET — THREE FACTS, TWO VERBS

Everything a service will ever need managed: what it is, how it connects, what it feeds — then one verb to change the credential and one to leave. No per-service settings pages.

THE ROW ITSELF ASKS

No modal. The verb becomes the question where it sat, states the consequence in one sentence, and tapping anywhere else is Keep — the pattern that deletes a sky in Many Skies.

AFTER — THE GHOST KEEPS THE SEAT

The row slides down among the unconnected, price back on the tag. Nothing was thrown away; arrangements keep the seats, and reconnecting relights every card where it was. A different animal from removing one card in Tend — that touches one sky; this dims them all.

THREE REMOVES, THREE WEIGHTS

Remove a card · in Tend. Disconnect a service · here. Delete the account · here. Its 2 cards go ghost on every sky. Everything, on every device. No undo. A question, then a hold. Friction is the scale the consequence is weighed on.

Not destructive, so no red: signing out empties the phone, not the account. The same ask-in-place shape, one step lighter.

Free states what Pro is in one sentence — no timer, no ribbon; "See Pro" opens the payroll, a later chat. Store rules mean cancel/manage happens in the store's own room; restore lives here for reinstalls. The Tweaks panel flips to between these lives.

Then the hold — the door opens slowly. After — it ends where it began. No goodbye card, no survey. The clock is already right — the first light of Raising the Sail, new again.

Elsewhere — the wall, and daylight nothing below deck renders on the wall · the theme row's consequence

THE WALL STATES; THE PHONE FIXES

The broken card dims and keeps its last known, exactly as on the phone — the wall never asks for anything. A one-second hold surfaces the pill; it names the trouble, points to the phone, and sinks after five seconds. Nothing below deck ever renders here.

THE SUBSCRIPTION ROW, BOTH LIVES

Free states what Pro is in one sentence — no timer, no ribbon; "See Pro" opens the payroll, a later chat. Store rules mean cancel/manage happens in the store's own room; restore lives here for reinstalls. The Tweaks panel flips to between these lives.

DELETE ACCOUNT — THE ROW ASKS, FULLY

The consequence is named piece by piece — skies, connections, sign-in — not summarized as "your data." Same shape as disconnect, one shelf heavier.

THEN THE HOLD — THE DOOR OPENS SLOWLY

The thin line is the screen's one moving element. A hold weighs more than a second tap and cannot be done by accident — the store-required door, honest and slow.

AFTER — IT ENDS WHERE IT BEGAN

No goodbye card, no survey. The clock is already right — the first light of Raising the Sail, new again.

1g Elsewhere — the wall, and daylight nothing below deck renders on the wall · the theme row's consequence

THE WALL STATES; THE PHONE FIXES

The broken card dims and keeps its last known, exactly as on the phone — the wall never asks for anything. A one-second hold surfaces the pill; it names the trouble, points to the phone, and sinks after five seconds. Nothing below deck ever renders here.

THE SUBSCRIPTION ROW, BOTH LIVES

Free states what Pro is in one sentence — no timer, no ribbon; "See Pro" opens the payroll, a later chat. Store rules mean cancel/manage happens in the store's own room; restore lives here for reinstalls. The Tweaks panel flips to between these lives.

THEME — LIGHT, APPLIED

The theme row's consequence, immediate and whole-app. Same room in daylight tokens; the dot rules hold. Auto follows the system — and the wall's after-dark ember clock is untouched by this choice.

Open seams, flagged: the pull-handle dot from 1a, and whether signing out on the phone should also blank a paired wall tablet immediately or let it run until its session lapsed — a kiosk-chat question. The sail did not appear once in this room; that is on purpose.