

1 Raising the Sail the guided front door - what comes before The Sky Fills In, and seeds it Feel it — the clickable golden path →

A newcomer learns Vela by building it: services are dealt one at a time, card by card, and every card they take lights up on their forming sky below. The front door is the one characterful surface Vela has — a warm gold accent, a night-sky illustration, and a mascot built from the new mark: a little gold sail that guides silently and celebrates each light with a gust. The moment the sky is handed over, the gold leaves with the sail — the surface underneath is exactly the calm one already designed.

Cold open - the sail → Five deals, card by card → Each cost paid in place — nothing - a place - a sign-in - a key → Account, once → Your sky, lit →

The calm surface - the wall follows

The deal, not the aisle
One service at a time, its 1-2 cards face up, the forming sky always visible below.
Picking is the interaction; the board filling is the reward — 1b.

Account only when it earns it
Clock and Weather never ask. The account sheet appears once, right before the first connection that must live on Vela's server — whichever that is — 1d.

Gold is a guest
The front door runs on one warm gold accent — buttons, picks, the sail. At the reveal it drains back to the surface's quiet blue; nothing gold survives the handoff — 1g.

Every return lands home
Sign-ins leave honestly and land back on the forming board, where the card you left is lighting. The light is the confirmation; no success page — 1e.

Scope: flow and experience, not widgets — every card is the standard card with a plain neutral value; a ghost is the dimmed one. The mascot is silent (Luno-style; alive through motion only); copy is warmer than the dashboard but never hyped, and the surface this hands off to is unchanged from The Sky Fills In. Web render stands in for React Native.

1a Cold open — the sail on a dark sea what Vela is, in one breath; two doors out, both honest

PHONE - 0 SECONDS IN

WHAT A STRANGER READS, IN ORDER

- 1 A gold sail bobbing on a dark sea of dots — warmth against calm, alive before anything is tapped.
- 2 One line says what it is; the second says how it'll happen — card by card. No feature list, no carousel.
- 3 One primary door. The skip is honest about where it goes; the basics, already lit — never an empty screen (1b).
- 4 The mascot never speaks and has no face — like a desk lamp, its character is entirely posture and timing.

1b Deal 1 — Clock teaches the whole game the first card costs nothing, so pick → light is learned in one tap

THE DEAL — ONE CARD, FACE UP

The forming sky is on screen from the first second — dark, honest, waiting. The sail presents from the corner; the dots are the only map of what's left.

FIRST LIGHT — AND THE NEXT DEAL ARRIVES

The gust: the sail leans hard, two wind lines whip past, done in 700ms. The celebration plays where the card landed, and the teach line names the loop once — then never again.

1c Deal 2 — two cards, one cost picking is per card; paying is per service — one place lights both

BOTH PICKED — THE BUTTON NAMES THE PRICE

Tapping a card picks it — a 2px gold ring, the same selection language Tend uses. Take one or both; the primary stays one honest sentence about the cost.

THE LOCATION SHEET — PAY IN PLACE

The same sheet the settled product uses (Sky pass) — learned here first, in gold. Typing a city swaps the primary to "Light the cards".

BOTH LIGHT AT ONCE — DEAL 3 ARRIVES

One gust for the pair, not two. The board is visibly becoming a dashboard — three cards in, the product has already proven itself.

1d The account, folded in — once, when it earns it it interrupts the first kept connection only; Clock and Weather never met it

TAP "SIGN IN WITH GOOGLE" — THIS SLIDES IN FIRST

One sheet, one reason, stated plainly. Whichever kept connection comes first — Google, Linear, or the Claude key — this is where it appears, and it never appears again.

THE EMAIL FALLBACK — TWO STEPS, SAME SHEET

No password exists anywhere in Vela — a code or a platform sign-in, nothing to forget. Creating the account flows straight on into the Google handoff; no detour, no dead end.

1e The sign-in handoff — leave honestly, land home the return is the payoff: same board, same positions, one card lighting

AWAY — THEIR SCREEN, NOT OURS

We never restyle their login; the contrast is the honesty. The sheet before this one said exactly where you were going.

THE RETURN — THE CARDS YOU LEFT ARE LIGHTING

No reload, no interstitial, no "success". You land exactly where you left — deal 4 is already waiting above while the calendar cards shimmer in below.

LIT — THE BADGE SAYS IT ONCE, THEN FADES

The gust plays at the sail as the values fade up, "connected" lives a few seconds, then the cards are just part of the sky; if the handoff dies, the ghost says "Sign-in didn't finish" and offers the door again — same rule as the settled product.

1f Deals 4 and 5 — the other two costs Linear is the same door as Google; Claude is a paste, checked on the button

LINEAR — OUT AND BACK, ACCOUNT ALREADY MADE

The second sign-in is cheaper — no account gate, just out and back. The return lands the same way: board, shimmer, gust, badge.

CLAUDE — THE KEY, CHECKED IN PLACE

Checking happens on the button, never a new screen. A bad key reveals one border and says "That key didn't work." — nothing shakes, nothing apologizes.

THE LAST LIGHT — EVERY DOT GOLD

Passed cards simply never appear — passing is silent, never punished. Anything passed waits as a ghost in Tend, exactly where the settled product keeps them.

1g The reveal — the gold leaves with the sail chrome collapses, the board becomes the screen, the accent drains to blue

"YOUR SKY, LIT." — THE SAIL'S FAREWELL

The deal chrome collapses upward, the grid relaxes to the surface's spacing, and the sail gusts once — then sails off the edge, shrinking. It is not on the dashboard. It was never going to live there.

HANDED OFF — THE CALM SURFACE, UNCHANGED

This frame contains nothing gold and nothing new — it is the Glance surface from The Sky Fills In, prepped with the six cards this person chose. The one accent is blue again; the only motion is one pulse and the ticking clock.

1h The skip — honored, never punished from anywhere, nobody ever lands on an empty screen

SKIP AT 0 SECONDS — THIS IS THE WHOLE JOURNEY

Skip lands here in one beat: Clock ticking, Weather from the device's coarse region until told otherwise — then the same farewell and drain to the calm surface. Skipping mid-flow keeps whatever is already lit.

WHY THE SKIP GETS THE SAME CEREMONY

The skip is a first impression too. It gets the reveal, the farewell, the drain — just a smaller sky. A skipped person's second session opens on a working product with ghosts waiting in Tend, which is exactly the settled state of the Sky pass.

Nothing nags afterward. The unit cards sit under Tend's hairline, stating their price, forever patient.

1i The wall — a pairing, not a second onboarding the wall shows a code and waits; the phone does the picking; the fill is the wall's own reveal

WALL TABLET, FIRST BOOT — IT ASKS FOR NOTHING BUT A GLANCE

No keyboard, no sign-in, no picking on a wall — a four-character code and the bobbing sail. The Pro door itself was already passed on the phone (Sky pass, the payroll at "Hang on a wall").

THE PHONE SIDE — FOUR CHARACTERS

This side is the settled product, so it stays blue — the gold moment belongs to the wall about to light.

THE LINK LANDS — THE WALL'S OWN REVEAL, THEN A PURE STATE

The cards sweep in as one reveal — the same fill the phone got, at room scale — while the little sail crosses the top corner once and exits. Then the state is pure: zero chrome, glanced from across a room, tended only from the phone.

Try next: "walk the golden path and poke every branch"; "huff the gust — two other celebration shapes for 1b"; "show the error branches: dead sign-in return, bad key, denied location"; "the wall reveal 1g as a timed motion sequence". Tweaks: annotations and the live clock can be toggled on this file.